Huskies QB holding his own at Riders camp

Feeling Green, White and all right. Experience will have Burko ready for the CIS football season, coaches say

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

University of Saskatchewan quarterback Drew Burko will be ready to go for the start of the Huskies' 2013 season after being pushed to perform at a whole new level of play.

For the last three days, Burko has been practising with the Saskatchewan Roughriders at their 2013 training camp, and Huskies head coach Brian Towriss said the experience would

Durant impressed

Riders quarterback Darian Durant said Burko has got the potential, and he feels with some time and work with Roughriders offensive co-ordinator George Cortez, Burko can go the distance.

- "He's picking up everything really well," said Durant. "He's a smart guy, he has a ton of talent and he's young. I think him being around us vets is giving him some knowledge and the experience, and I think he can take it back with him."

"He's picking up a lot of stuff in the meetings and (learning about) the velocity and how hard they have to throw the ball on every rep," said Towriss. "It's good for him to come out and work with these guys who have a little more experience and a little better arm strength."

Riders quarterback coach Khari Jones said although Burko has a long way to go, he's holding his own among the more experienced players.

"Drew is doing all right. I like what he's bringing to the table," said Jones.

"It's a big jump to go from college football to professional football, and the biggest thing is not looking out of place. But he's working hard and he's taking everything that we're giving to him and trying to put it to good use. I think it's going to help him a lot."

Drew Burko, quarterback with the University of Saskatchewan Huskies, has been practising with the Saskatchewan Roughriders for the last three days, and coaches and veteran quarterbacks alike say the young QB has been performing well under the pressure. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

Restructuring may benefit STC, according to think-tank

Changes. Saskatchewan Transportation Company's restructuring would make it a facilitator of bus services, rather than a provider, new report says

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

The Saskatchewan Transportation Company may benefit from a revamp.

A recent report from the Frontier Centre for Public Policy (FCPP) has found the Saskatchewan Transportation Company (STC) might benefit from a restructuring that would position it as a facilitator of bus services, rather than a provider.

According to the report, in 2012 STC buses lost $2.63 per mile and its findings indicate it would be beneficial for the STC to provide service on main, profitable routes, while tendering less profitable, but socially desirable, routes to private companies.

Steve Lafleur, one of the authors of the report and a policy analyst with the FCPP, said with the amount of subsidies the STC is getting from the provincial government — about $9.2 million in 2012 — the change could help the Crown corporation save money.

"We'd like to see the Saskatchewan Transportation Company turned into the Saskatchewan transportation commission," said Lafleur. "Rather than be a provider of inter-city busing, we'd like to see it become a purchaser — because it is helpful to have a central coordinating body, but they're not very good at delivering the service."

However, Candace Phelps, executive director of strategic planning and communications with the STC, said the company is working with private service providers in terms of managing routes. She noted the STC still handles administrative duties such as scheduling and ticketing.

"For the most part, our partnerships tend to be with private-sector operators who want to drive," Phelps said. "And that's where it stops."

There have been examples of communities requesting bus service and the STC encouraging them to seek a private operator, though Phelps noted there's been little to no interest from the private sector.

"For us, the addition isn't always economically feasible," she explained. "But we've always said if there's a private-sector operator in the area, we'll interline with them and partner with them ... and with almost all of them, no one has come forward."

Delayed trial

Regina lawyer may be the one to represent Douglas Hales

A man who had fired a number of lawyers after being charged in the death of a Saskatoon university student appears close to hiring someone to represent him at his trial.

Douglas Hales, 34, is charged with first-degree murder and indignity to human remains by setting fire to a body in the death of Daleen Bosse.

The 25-year-old aboriginal woman was last seen at a Saskatoon nightclub in 2004, and her remains were later found northeast of the city.

Hales was arrested in 2008, but his case has not been able to proceed because of problems finding defence counsel.

A Saskatoon judge heard Monday that Hales is talking to Regina lawyer Bob Hrycan, and that a key issue in the potential arrangement is whether court services will agree to pay for a junior counsel to assist Hrycan.

Grow-op. Underground bunker containing 430 plants, industrial generator linked to Hells Angels, police say

EMILY JACKSON
Metro in Vancouver

A sophisticated underground marijuana grow-op disguised as a Langley hobby farm — complete with three sheep, a pig and guarded by about a dozen pit bulls and Chihuahuas — was busted by police over the weekend.

RCMP needed a crane to excavate five steel shipping containers connected with a continuous underground pathway at the property in the 27000-block of 56th Avenue, according to a news release from B.C.'s Combined Forces Special Enforcement Unit.

Three men and one woman were arrested when investigators found 430 plants at the site, though they were later released pending further investigation. The dogs are being cared for by one of their family members.

Officers were "shocked" that the operators cut into a nearby natural gas pipeline to power the elaborate bunker system with an industrial-sized natural gas generator worth about $100,000.

"This had the potential to be extremely dangerous to the public and emergency responders," CFSEU-BC spokesman Sgt. Lindsey Houghton said in a statement.

Police believe the grow-op, described as a "complex operation that required a great deal of planning and equipment," including cranes and flatbed trucks, was running for at least a couple of years.

This is the second underground grow-op the CFSEU-BC has dismantled in the past two months. Police believe both are linked to the Hells Angels.

Colorado judge accepts James Holmes' insanity plea

Sheriff's deputies search people before they enter district court for a hearing for Aurora theatre-shooting suspect James Holmes, inset, in Centennial, Colo., on Tuesday. A judge accepted James Holmes' long-awaited plea of not guilty by reason of insanity Tuesday and ordered him to undergo a mental evaluation — an examination that could be a decisive factor in whether the Colorado theatre shooting suspect is convicted and sentenced to die. The judge also granted prosecutors access to a hotly contested notebook that Holmes sent to a psychiatrist shortly before the July 20 rampage, which left 12 people dead and 70 injured in a bloody, bullet-riddled movie theatre in suburban Denver. BRENNAN LINSLEY/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Erectile-dysfunction pills. Alleged love-drug pushers looking at hard time

Two men are accused of bringing into Canada hundreds of thousands of contraband erectile-dysfunction pills made in China.

The Canada Border Services Agency says the illegal products were intended for sale on the Internet and in sex shops in different provinces.

Dozens of charges are being laid against Alain Elmaleh and Alain Richer, and against 12 businesses Elmaleh owns in five provinces: British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

The border-services agency announced Tuesday it is laying 37 charges against the two Montreal men under the Customs Act, the Food and Drugs Act and the Criminal Code.

Authorities say the investigation was launched in 2011.

Proposed ban. Rapists in India 'provoked by mannequins': Official

Mannequins displaying lingerie and other skimpy clothing may soon be banned in India's cosmopolitan city of Mumbai as an anti-rape measure.

The municipal council overwhelmingly passed a resolution last month barring stores from putting scantily-clad mannequins outside their shops. The municipal commissioner has yet to give the required approval of the resolution.

The measure comes as an American woman was gang-raped Tuesday in the northern Indian resort town of Manali, police said.

"Such people get provoked by mannequins. After all, a mannequin is a replica of a woman's body. That's why I oppose it, because mannequins do not suit Indian culture," said city council member Ritu Tawde. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Would you dig through a landfill for this game?

A New Mexico city commission has agreed to allow a Canadian studio to search an old landfill where old, terrible Atari games are rumoured to be buried. The Alamogordo Daily News reports that Alamogordo, N.M., commissioners will allow Fuel Industries, which has offices in Ottawa and Los Angeles, to search the landfill for games. One sought-after game, the E.T. video game, is thought by some gamers to be one of the worst video games of all time. Atari paid Steven Spielberg tens of millions of dollars to license the E.T. name, and the dud of a game caused the troubled company's worth to sink even further at the time. Canadians slow pace of debt accumulation

Personal finance. Data shows largest quarterly drop in non-mortgage debt since 2004

New data on consumer credit suggests Canadians are becoming more cautious about making purchases that involve taking on debt.

The analysis by TransUnion Market Trends shows average consumer debt in Canada, excluding mortgages, fell by two per cent to $26,935 in the first three months of 2013 from the fourth quarter in 2012.

While total debt is still 3.5 per cent higher from a year ago, it was the first quarterly drop since the third quarter of 2011 and the largest since the firm began collecting the data in 2004.

China. Entrepreneur has hay day squeezing profits from B.C.'s excess crops

China's booming agricultural industry is literally proving to be rich fodder for farmers in Vanderhoof, B.C.

Entrepreneur Judd Wu moved from China last spring to launch Top Hay Agri Industries, specializing in compressing hay bales to a fraction of their original size, for shipment to China's voracious agricultural markets.

Wu chose Vanderhoof, which is in central B.C., because it has the acreage and climate to produce lots of hay, as well as convenient transportation links to the Prince Rupert port.

His first shipment was trucked out last week and Wu hopes to eventually increase daily production to 150 metric tonnes, feeding China's estimated annual demand of 100 million tonnes.

Nechako-Lakes MLA John Rustad says Vanderhoof has the potential to grow much more hay than the region can consume. He says shipping the excess overseas prevents low prices caused by a glut on local markets, offers a much-needed economic boost for the Nechako Valley, and strengthens Canada's bond with Chinese and other overseas markets.

DENY MILK FOR GREENER PASTURES

I'm so confused.

This week's hot book says that if you really want a meaningful relationship, you should go on a sex diet.

Well, to be precise, it says women should go on a sex diet, but that has obvious implications for their potential partners, who are everybody else.

The book is called The 30-Day Love Detox: Cleanse Yourself of Bad Boys, Cheaters, and Men Who Won't Commit — And Find a Real Relationship.

The author is Dr. Wendy Walsh, one of those friendly experts who populate the cable news channels. She even plays cable news experts on movies like Baywatch and The Cable Guy. I'm not sure how she went from a Ryerson journalism grad to "doctor," but it happened somewhere between Halifax, where she was born, and Los Angeles, where she was reborn on Fox and

JUST SAVIN'
Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

CNN.

She does appear to have a PhD in psychology from the California Graduate Institute, which is not based on the back of a pack of matches, so we should listen.

The diet analogy goes beyond the title. It's all about "slow love." Like "slow food," get it? Citing "evolutionary psychology," Dr. Blond Alliteration promises to help women:

- Purge junk-food men
 - Learn the five sexual myths that keep women single
 - Determine when to begin the onset of sexual activity in a new relationship
 - Avoid the biggest mistakes women make when dating online
- Spot a commitment-oriented man at his "state of readiness," which is not, apparently, what you think it is.
The secret: No sex for the first 30 days. As far as I can tell, she'd really like you to abstain until he puts a ring on it, but that's way too long for today's post-Sex and the City woman.

Dr. BA also says women should stop sexting during this same period of abstinence. It's the sexual equivalent of empty calories.

But! But! you're probably asking yourself: "How is this any different from the advice that mom used to dole out on a daily basis?" And, truth be known, still does. Well, it's scientific. During orgasm, the female body unleashes a tide of oxytocin, a hormone that encourages bonding. This is dangerous, according to Dr. Walsh, as a woman can think she's just hooking up when she's really bonding with some unsuitable, commitment-phobic, bad-boy creep who is just using her for sex.

So it's like mom (or dad, who knows all about commitment-phobic bad boys because he probably used to be one) with a PhD. Just goes to show the value of a good education. The moral of this story is that morality has nothing to do with it, but it's still the same old story: "Why would he buy the milk if he can get the, er, cow for free?"

Slow love rules. Even in the 21st century.

Paid to be unemployed: when actors get naked

Owen Wilson and Vince Vaughn use a familiar formula with their latest bumbling, stumbling comedy

The new buddy comedy The Internship pairs Owen Wilson and Vince Vaughn for the first time since 2005's Wedding Crashers.

They are still wild and crazy guys, but this time out they are unemployed wild and crazy guys pushed out of their jobs by technology.

Unable to get a foothold in the new media field they take intern jobs at Google.

"We're looking at some sort of mental Hunger Games against a bunch of genius kids for just a handful of jobs," says Wilson.

Many movies have used unemployment as the starting point for storytelling.

In Lost in America, rated one of Bravo's 100 Funniest Movies, Albert Brooks plays a successful advertising executive who gets fired for insulting his boss.

"Second prize is a set of steak knives," says Blake (Alec Baldwin). "Third prize is you're fired."

Playwright David Mamet based the original play on his experiences working in a real estate office in the 1970s.

Finally, The Full Monty is a comedy that takes a serious look at the effects of unemployment on the individual and the community.

Set in Sheffield, England, it's the story of six men, most unemployed steel workers, who come up with a unique way to pay the bills.

They decide to form a Chippendale dancer style group, separating themselves from the pack by going "the full monty" and go completely stark naked.

While filming, the actors agreed to go completely nude in front of 400 extras provided they only had to do it once.

They got it in one take, and according to Roger Ebert, the inspiring and revealing final scene "was applauded at the screening I attended."

From modern skyscrapers in Panama City to the wild countryside and pristine beaches, Panama is a country of contrasts.

The Panama Canal, of course, brings people from all over the world to the capital, where international cuisine is easily found along with Caribbean flavours in restaurants such as Manolo Caracol and La Vitrola.

Its imposing skyline, dotted with ultra-modern architecture, is on display through the windows of downtown hotels like the Radisson Decapolis or the rooftop of the Hard Rock Hotel Panama Megapolis.

Getting there

Plenty more to do in Panama

See this: Thousand-year-old gold objects and ceramics have been recently found in the tombs of an unnamed civilization at El Cano, near Farallon. Archeologists are still onsite making discoveries.

Buy this: Authentic Panama hats can be had at the home/shop of Rinaldo Quiros, above, in La Pintada. Each is handmade and priced from $15 to $600. Depending on how it's worn, you're telling the locals you're single, looking for a fight or a "vaquero" — a cowboy.

Do this: It's fast, safe, scenic — it's a thrill. Zip line in-between tree canopies in the Anton Valley, including over a waterfall. There are four platforms and great opportunities for photos.

The world's greatest shortcut

It's impressive today and it must've blown people's minds 99 years ago when the first ship crossed the Panama Canal. Possibly the world's greatest shortcut — it takes ships an average of eight to 10 hours to transit the Canal versus nearly a month to go around South America — the Canal is also a must-see tourist attraction.

Its on-site museum has images and tools starting with the original French attempt at building the Canal, which was followed by the successful American completion of the crossing in 1914. Tens of thousands died during construction due to illnesses carried by mosquitoes and engineers were forced to innovate to dig through the continental divide.

Today, the Canal is one of the Seven Wonders of the Modern World and employs about 9,500 people, bringing in $1.5 billion to the Panamanian economy.

Although managed by the United States until 1999, the Canal is now nationally managed with an expansion on the way to handle larger ships. It's expected to be completed next year when the Canal turns 100.

At the Miraflores lock, there's a buffet restaurant and viewing platform that allow tourists to see the ships enter the locks and watch them go through the various stages linking the ocean to Gatun Lake.

Embera Indigenous Community

Just hours from downtown Panama City is the Embera Indigenous Community. The hotel tour bus takes the group to the riverfront, where a wooden pirogue (boat) awaits. The journey upriver took about 15 minutes before we were welcomed at the village by the sounds of traditional instruments. At Embera, tourists are invited to mingle with the locals, watch traditional dances and eat a lunch of fried fish and plantain chips. Handmade arts and crafts are available for sale and the picturesque village is a wonderful spot for photography. Tour costs $90.

Trip tips

Hit the road this summer

ON THE MOVE
Loren Christie
life@metronews.ca

If the lure of the open road is calling you, just pick a stretch of highway somewhere between Trinity and Tofino. From coast to coast, Canada has limitless options when it comes to the makings of a great summer road trip.

Nova Scotia's Cabot Trail has always been a personal favourite. It offers stunning scenery, wildlife viewing (whales and moose) and the opportunity to touch the distinct Acadian and Scottish cultures that colour the history of the province. It is an ongoing debate whether to do the drive clockwise or counter-clockwise — I prefer clockwise. It builds your anticipation of the sites along the route in a more logical fashion.

Route 132 in Quebec's Gaspé region offers a scenic shore-hugging drive through silver-steepled villages surrounded by mountains and serenaded by the sea. The route forms a loop of about 900 kilometres. As the seaway widens into the gulf, try some ferry-hopping to explore both coasts of the St. Lawrence River.

The Trans Labrador Highway is a relatively new 1,054 kilometre frontier highway that allows you to explore the wilderness, culture and adventurous nature of Labrador. Make sure to visit the 16th century Basque whaling station turned National Historic Site in Red Bay. This section of the highway also offers numerous whale and iceberg viewing spots and the chance to visit the tallest lighthouse in Atlantic Canada.

For those who want to hit the pavement but don't want to do the actual driving go sidcar with Jasper Motorcycle Tours. They offer numerous touring packages of Alberta's stunning Icefields Parkway. You get up close and personal with not only the asphalt, but the scenery and the wildlife. On my tour we saw a brown bear, big horned sheep and more elk than I could count. The drivers are fully knowledgeable about the area so you enjoy a fully guided tour as you take in the sights.

If you prefer not having to suit up in leathers and a motorcycle helmet and are looking for something a little more fancy, consider Niagara Classic Cabs in Southern Ontario. They will customize your tour through the Niagara wine-growing region in high style. It's perfect for people who want to hit the wineries without worrying about who is going to be the designated driver.

Finders keepers in game for seekers

Geocaching craze. Try a treasure hunt next time you travel

Ever since there were pirates or wide-eyed children searching for eggs on Easter morning, treasure hunting has been a draw for the adventurous.

The adventure, of course, is in the hunt as much as it is in finding what has been hidden and meant to be found.

Combine that sense of adventure with global positioning technology and a desire to take advantage of the great outdoors, and you have a phenomenon known as geocaching — and tourism promoters are catching on, hoping to cash in.

Some tourism groups have watched the geocaching trend blossom over the past decade, and are taking advantage of it to attract treasure hunters and their treasure.

"There are a series of geocaches that have been set up in various locations with the express purpose of bringing people to that area," says John Robb, president of the Ontario Geocaching Association.

The Ottawa Valley Tourist Association, based in Pembroke, Ont., encourages visitors to pack their GPS units and head to Renfrew

County, northwest of Ottawa, a region that has become a popular geocaching destination with more than 300 cache sites scattered throughout the area.

Forgot your GPS, or don't have one? No problem. The association, like others, will loan one with a damage deposit.

It has become big business. "Anybody that does any level of geocaching will, at some point, travel to do geocaching," said Robb.

One of the largest annual geocaching events held in Canada is organized by the Central Ontario Geocachers. This year, hotels in and around Ontario's cottage country are expected to be inundated on June 15 by thousands of the sports enthusiasts for a hunt held at Geneva Park on the shore of Lake Couchiching, about 150 kilometres north of Toronto.

Don't bring the beach to your business: Shedding light on sunny-season attire

Who wears short-shorts? Perhaps you do on your off-time, but try to be mindful of making your co-workers uncomfortable

Metro World News

It's finally summer, that sweet time of year when we get to shake off our winter doldrums and shed the extra layers of clothing we've been bundled in for the past six months. But though the long, hazy days ahead are synonymous with relaxation, this doesn't necessarily translate to your work wardrobe. It may be beach weather out there, but that doesn't mean you can start showing up to the office looking like you're headed to the shore. We asked four style experts in Boston to weigh in on the summer staples that are appropriate for the workplace and those you should save for those weekend seaside jaunts.

Do: Coloured jeans

While jeans are typically seen as a "Friday only" look, a pair with a pop of colour is a great way to show off your personality. The right coloured jeans definitely do work at the office, says Dani McDonald, owner of Flock. "It's a great way to incorporate the colours of the season into your work attire," says McDonald. For a dressier look, McDonald recommends pairing your jeans with a silk blouse or a well-pressed shirt — with collar unbuttoned at top.

Do: Florals

Think a fun floral print is too youthful for the office? Think again! "Floral (dresses)

If your office is in the sand, dress in whatever duds you'd like. But chances are you've got people around you. Keep it professional! ISTOCK are on trend and work perfect for the office," says Ann Dingwell, owner of Turtle.

As long as the dress is the proper length, and not too low-cut, they're an office do, says Dingwell. To keep warm in AC blasted offices, Dingwell recommends pairing dresses with a jacket or lightweight cashmere cardigan. Guys may want to add a pop of colour with a floral tie design, perhaps a nice paisley.

Don't: Maxi dresses

While long, flowing maxi dresses are both incredibly comfortable and versatile enough for most occasions, they don't pass for professional office attire.

"Maxi dresses tend to (either) be a little too casual (think beach wear or bathing suit cover ups) or too dressy for a formal work environment," says Pam Santorelli, owner of Habit.

Santorelli recommends saving the maxis for the weekends, when you can dress them up — or down — as needed.

Do: Tank tops and T-shirts

Gone are the days when baring shoulders at the office was a no-no.

Tank tops are great layering pieces for work, just remember to save the rib-knit tanks for the gym.

"Tank tops in the office are a do if they're dressy," says McDonald.

To keep the look work appropriate, McDonald suggests something structured, like a peplum tank, paired with a skirt.

Guys may want to avoid a printed T-shirt, but a solid-coloured or patterned T worn with a cardigan or sports jacket offers a light and fresh look.

Don't: Shorts

While shorts can exude a preppy confidence, Emily

Summer rules

Our experts also tell us that...

- If you're wearing open-toed shoes or sandals, a pedicure is a must, says Dingwell.
- You should invest in a good strapless bra. Bra straps, especially plastic, shouldn't be seen, says Benson.
- Lightweight dresses can be a little sheer, so wear a slip, says Santorelli.
- If you're not a fan of denim, then coloured khakis are a great option, says Benson.

Benson, founder and owner of The Fashion Truck, a mobile fashion boutique, recommends steering clear of them.

"There are few occasions and few styles of shorts that actually work for a business setting," says Benson. So when it's 90 degrees out there and pants just won't do, go for a dress.

Don't: Flip-Flops

While these casual sandals are many people's go-to footwear on a swelteringly hot day, flip-flopping your way to your desk won't win you any marks at the office. Flip-flops should be worn only at the beach, says Benson.

Guys, this goes for you too.

Federer a shadow of normal self in quarters

French Open. 17-time Grand Slam champ bids adieu following thrashing by Tsonga

A point from losing the first set of his French Open quarter-final, Roger Federer shanked a routine forehand, sending the ball 10 feet beyond the opposite baseline.

The Court Philippe Chatrier crowd roared with approval, then loudly chanted the last name of Federer's opponent, Frenchman Jo-Wilfried Tsonga.

That shot was a clear indication that Federer was hardly Federesque on this day. There were plenty of others: He argued with the chair umpire about a call. He dumped overhead smashes into the net. And in a truly rare ungraceful moment, he failed to put a racket to — or get out of the way of — a backhand flip by a sliding Tsonga, instead getting hit on the back.

All in all, Federer looked lost out there Tuesday against the sixth-seeded Tsonga, who pounded his way to a 7-5, 6-3, 6-3 victory over the 17-time Grand Slam champion in a one-hour, 51-minute mismatch

No surrender in Serena

Serena Williams came from behind in the third set to advance French Open semifinals for the first time since 2003 when she defeated Svetlana Kuznetsova 6-1, 3-6, 6-3.

- Williams had been beaten the last four times she reached the French Open quarters. The 15-time Grand Slam champion, who is ranked No. 1, won her only Roland Garros title in 2002.
- "I'm very happy to have won this quarter-final because the whole night I was afraid of my quarter-final match," she told the crowd in French on Tuesday. "It was a very tough match today, but it's good for me because, I don't know, but it's very good. I am exhausted."

remarkable for its lopsidedness and brevity.

"I struggled a little bit everywhere. To be honest, personally, I'm pretty sad about the match and the way I played. But that's how it goes. I tried to figure things out, but it was difficult. And Jo does a good job keeping the pressure on," Federer said.

"He was just ... better in all areas," continued Federer, whose lone French Open title, in 2009, allowed him to equal Pete Sampras' then-record of 14 major championships. "He returned better than I did. Served better than I did. I struggled to find my rhythm."

Mr Musk says Supercharge me

Autopilot. Versatile multi-tasker behind Tesla to build risky North America-wide charging network

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

Tesla is not waiting. You other electric car companies and various government jurisdictions can just keep combing your hair and looking for your wallet and house keys. Tesla is heading out the door. That's the gist of Tesla's announcement last week about its intent to build a continent-wide network of charging stations, all by its lonesome.

Supercharging

The network will utilize the new Tesla "Supercharger," currently in beta testing and scheduled to roll out to customers this summer. The technology will allow the Tesla Model S to be charged at 120 kW, replenishing three hours of driving in about 20

30 minute charge = three hours of driving. BOTH HANDOUT to 30 minutes — just enough time for a double-double and a bodily-function break. You're then free and able to drive off to another city, and another supercharger station, and to repeat that process as many times as you would like. In a statement, Tesla said the Supercharger network will enable Tesla owners "to travel long distances, for free, indefinitely." Yes, free fuel.

But indefinitely? I don't think that can actually work, unless you're one of those teenage vampires.

The Network

Currently Tesla already has a network that services California and Nevada on the west coast, and the Washington, DC to Boston region on the east coast. By next month, the number of stations will triple to cover more regions, including the northwest (Vancouver to Seattle to Portland). Within six months the network will purportedly connect "most of the major metro areas in the U.S. and Canada," including Ottawa to Montreal. Apparently, it will then be possible to travel diagonally across the U.S. from Los Angeles to New York using only the Tesla Supercharger network. And within a year, the network will, according to the statement, "stretch across the continent, covering almost the entire population of the U.S. and Canada."

The futuristic charger may soon eclipse the gas pump.

The man behind Tesla

The Tesla charging network is just one more bold move by Elon Musk, the enigmatic co-founder, CEO and Product Architect of Tesla Motors. Other things on the billionaire's resumé: co-founder of PayPal; co-creator and principle shareholder of SolarCity, the leading provider of solar power systems in the U.S.; chief designer at SpaceX, which does a lot of things in space with rockets, like shuttling cargo back and forth from the International Space Station. Sometimes one strong, determined and capable person taking a calculated risk is the only way big things can get done. Otherwise it's a quagmire of committees, special interest groups and over thinking. But while I admire Elon Musk, I'm not sure I like him. He's making the rest of us look bad. Especially those of us who struggle with decisions. Do I have trouble making decisions? Well, yes and no.

There's protection in that car paint

Driving force. Several different layers laid on and cured on the factory floor are all part of the long term battle against corrosion

Drive@metronews.ca

You might think your vehicle's paint is all about it looking good, but it's just half the story.

That paint job actually involves a multi-stage process that's as much about protecting the metal from corrosion as it is about appearance.

The first step starts before the car is even built. "The steel comes in as a coil with a zinc layer that's applied at the mill," says Tim Weingartz, paint materials and strategy manager for Ford Motor Company.

"The zinc is the first layer for corrosion protection."

The steel is made into a vehicle body, which is then dipped into two different tanks, each containing more than 60,000 litres of corrosion-resistant coating materials.

The body is then baked at 180 degrees Celsius to cure the coatings. These, plus that first zinc coating, provide three initial layers of protection against rust.

The first paint step is primer. It protects the top anti-corrosion layer from sunlight, which can make it go chalky, and it provides a smooth base for the paint.

Since it's a relatively elastic coating, it also absorbs the energy when debris hits it, helping to prevent stone chips.

"After that, we put on the layer that everyone thinks of as the paint," Weingartz says.

"It's typically a base coat which contains the colour and pigment. Over top of that, we apply clear coat. It's a superior barrier and it gives the car that depth of appearance that adds to the esthetics of the vehicle."

Some colour coats contain tiny flakes of aluminum or mica. Known as "metallic" paints, these give the finish an extra glimmer. All of the primer, paint, and clear coat layers together are about as thick as a human hair.

Once the final clear coat layer is applied, the vehicle is baked again to cure the paint.

"We used to bake the primer separately, and then the base coat and clear coat," Weingartz says. "We now have one bake for all three layers, which lowers the CO2 footprint by anywhere from 15 to 25 per cent, and the energy saving is very significant. The lean process has elevated us environmentally, and it's a cost savings, too."

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

You may prefer to hide than to deal with people who annoy you today. But that would be a shame because the planets indicate you have much to share, and much to gain from expressing your point of view.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

Someone you live or work with will test your willingness to stand up for what you believe over the next 24 hours. They don't know you as well as they should. A Taurus never gives in!

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

You may be big and tough enough to face a worrying situation alone by there is no reason why you should. Call on friends and colleagues to back you up today.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

A loved one is eager to kiss and make up and, deep down, so are you. Get over your hurt feelings and get back together. And remember: Everyone falls out occasionally.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

According to the planets, affairs of the heart need extra attention today, as do friendships that seem to be drifting apart. The upcoming new moon can heal any rift. But first that has to be your desire.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

Most people respond well to reason but one person is behaving so badly that you may have no choice but to lay down the law. No one plays hardball better than a Virgo.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

If someone offers you advice today, you would be wise to listen and, if possible, take action. The last thing they want is to see you make a silly and costly mistake — and you don't want to see it either.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

An opportunity to improve your status at work looks tempting but the planets warn it will mean a lot of extra responsibility and you already have too much on your plate.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

Your plans for the day should be based on what interests you, not on what other people expect of you. If you let them tell you what to do once, they will do it again and again.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

You may be doing well but you are also worried that the more you gain, the more likely it is someone will come along and take it away from you. That's far too negative an attitude — and far too materialistic.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

Routine tasks will come easy to you today and you will feel immensely pleased with yourself when it's all done. You will also be entitled to take it easy this evening, maybe in the company of a special friend.

Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20

If you have something to say, you must speak up. According to your solar chart, a frank exchange of views is not just an option but a must. Without it, confusion and bad feelings will continue. SALLY BROMPTON
